A business survey commissioned by supply chain services company, SerCom Solutions, shows strong interest among Irish-based companies in developing trading links with South East Asia, particularly China. Over 80 percent of respondents see China as an opportunity for business as opposed to a threat, with 57 percent of the companies surveyed already doing business in Asia. The survey, which was conducted by the research team at the National Institute for Transport & Logistics (NITL), also found that while 67 percent of companies rate their company's environmental performance as strong or very strong, almost 80 percent agree that environmental and sustainability issues are likely to become more critical in the years ahead.
